LUNG CANCER SCAN
 Support Screening Campaign

Screening for lung cancer in high-risk individuals can help find lung cancer early, when it's easier to treat and more likely to be cured. Screening can also find other health problems, such as emphysema, that can be treated before they become serious.

Screening is done with a low-dose CT scan. It's a quick, painless procedure that takes about 15 minutes. You'll breathe in a small amount of air to help the scanner see your lungs better.
